

Performance Auditing

Performance auditing asks whether programs were run economically and efficiently and whether the government has the means to measure their effectiveness. In other words, this type of auditing focuses on the economical and efficient management of public funds and resources, as well as the effectiveness of government programmes. For this reason, the results of performance audits tend to be the most attractive to parliamentarians.